POSTOFFICE ORDER
BARS MAIL GIVEN OUT ON SUNDAYNew Regulation Prevents Delivery When Applied for in Person.

SPECIAL DELIVERY PROVIDED

Shrewdness of Department at Washington Increases Receipts by Issuing Ten Cents for Forwarding Matter; Salaries of Five are Raised.

Postmaster A. H. Rector this morning received orders, following the passage of the postoffice appropriation bill, to Congress, just now, to close all congressional postoffices on Sunday. The new regulation, it is noted, will increase the salaries of the Sergeant-at-Arms and the Sergeant-of-Arms considerably and bring them back to Washington.

The situation was complicated by a double filibuster in the Senate. At least two Senate bills determining the day of adjournment unless measures they advocated were enacted. The Roosevelt-Archibald bill and the State claim bill were the matters in dispute. Senator Chamberlain of Oregon, Martin and Stevenson of Virginia and Calhoun of Texas threatened indefinitely to dead-lock the session unless the General Deficiency bill was passed with the provision authorizing payment by the Federal government of claims made by Virginia, Maryland, Oregon and Texas some of them a century ago. The House refused to agree to this provision.

Local persons expecting mail on Sunday, may depend on Saturday, 10 cents at the postoffice and describe the mail expected, which will be forwarded by special delivery. The order from the department provides that all special mail must be delivered promptly upon week days. If the mail does not arrive, the deposit of 10 cents will be returned.

Mail will be collected from the boxes Sunday, and dispatched as usual, and all incoming mail will be sorted and distributed as on week days, although the lobby will be closed.

Following is the clause in the post office appropriation bill, good time for the Sunday closing:

"That, however, postoffices of the first and second class shall not be opened on Sunday for the purpose of delivering mail to the general public, but this provision shall not prevent the prompt delivery of special delivery matter."

The postoffice appropriation bill had been passed on July 1. It was voted only to increase the sum from $1,000,000 to $1,000,000, and to appropriate $1,000,000 to $1,000,000.

LOCAL GREEKS EYE ICARIANS' ATTEMPT TO BREAK TURK RULE

Confederate Predicts General War in Europe in Less Than Two Years.

Local Greeks are interested intensely in the affairs of the Icarian natives of an island, which is a part of Crete, whose people are under the yoke of Turkey, to free the natives from the despotic rule of the Mohammedans. Some of the local Greeks are from Turkey and some are members of the Greek Orthodox church, which is preparing to support the call of their people.

British Ambassador to Turkey, Sir Edward Grey, was supplying themselves with munitions of war and are making ready to fight for their native land to prevent against the Turks.

A local Greek confederate discussed the effects of the war and predicted a general war in 1914.

MOTION PICTURE THEATRES TO BE PROBED BY STATE OFFICERS

Local and Other Film Houses to be Examined as to Safety.

Motion picture theatres in Connecticut and elsewhere in Pennsylvania will be investigated by officials of the State Health Department to bring about better sanitary and ventilating conditions.

This movement it was requested, today, will be strengthened by similar action on the part of the State Factory Department when Department officials of that office will enforce the regulations relating to safety and fire protection.

Recent outbreaks of smallpox and other diseases in this section of the state caused the Commonwealth's sanitarians and other officials to investigate complaints in motion picture houses in relation to the transmission of disease.

Dr. Sherrick Convention Delegate. Dr. W. N. Sherrick left today to attend the annual convention of the American Veterinary Association at Indianapolis, Ind. He was accompanied by his wife. They will meet Dr. J. R. Birman and wife at McRaeport, who will be continuing them to Indianapolis.

Ohio Suffers Arm Fracture. Charles C. Clegg, citizen of the Baltimore & Ohio, struck in an accident yesterday afternoon, suffered a fracture of the arm. He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Clegg. He was admitted to the Veterans' State Hospital for treatment.

West Penn Snow Shovel. West Penn Snow Shovel Corp., of the morning attracted attention. The shovel was being transported from the barn in Greenwood to a shed at the Iron Bridge.

PENROSE AND OTHER CASES
HALT CONGRESS ADJOURNMENT

Double Filibuster in Senate and Dead-lock Disgust Members of Both Houses.

United Press Telegram.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—After a morning spent in fruitless conference, the Senate and House met, today, with no change in the legislative deadlock indicated. The legislators faced another day of filibustering and jockeying for advantage and the leaders believed the end of the session was indefinitely postponed.

Disgusted with the dead-lock, many members slipped out of town yesterday and a count by the leaders today disclosed lack of a quorum. It was to avert the point of "no quorum" that the leaders acted, because with a point would enforce suspension of adjournment until the Sergeant-at-Arms could arrest members and bring them back to Washington.

The situation was complicated by a double filibuster in the Senate. At least two Senate bills determining the day of adjournment unless measures they advocated were enacted. The Roosevelt-Archibald bill and the State claim bill were the matters in dispute. Senator Chamberlain of Oregon, Martin and Stevenson of Virginia and Calhoun of Texas threatened indefinitely to dead-lock the session unless the General Deficiency bill was passed with the provision authorizing payment by the Federal government of claims made by Virginia, Maryland, Oregon and Texas some of them a century ago. The House refused to agree to this provision.

I was mentally juggling my crowd and planning my schedule for the day when a car that didn't belong to any of the '90's came up the driveway. It snarled one passenger and a chauffeur, the passenger being a red-headed young man whom I knew instantly. Hap knew him, too. He reached the steps by the time the newspaper man did and politely managed to block his progress.

There was a curious silence on the terrace after whisperings as to the identity of the newcomer. Everybody was listening.

"See Miss Aganzia?" we heard Hap repeat. "Awfully sorry. Miss Aganzia is in town."

"Can you tell me where she is?" the reporter asked.

"She's shopping," Hap lied glibly. "Never know exactly where a woman goes when she shops."

"Shopping?" repeated the reporter. "Duh?" He looked at Hap and smiled, glanced toward the front door, then frankly looked over Hap's shoulder at the crowd on the terrace. Hap noted the action and grinned. He swept his hand generally in our direction.

"You see she isn't here," he remarked affably. He was sure that Natalie was still upstairs in bed, but I knew better, and every minute I expected to see her step through the doors to the terrace. I noted and stood where I could look down the hallway. The reporter grinned at the reporter, didn't interrupt.

"Not a soul," I answered. "There's no one we ever knew who ever poked his nose in the presence of any one who ever poked his nose in this class. They all are terribly exclusive and awfully rich. I don't believe there's any one here who can think of less than a million, unless it's Mrs. Cutler, and she isn't poor by any means. Of course, I don't count the duke, for he's a duke; he has a title and prospects."

"Who is Mrs. Cutler?" asked Jo.

"I brought out my list and showed her the entries; then I launched into social history. But it was all too much for her at once; she held up her hand for me to stop.

"You're scaring me to death," she said. "Why, I won't have courage to go down. I haven't but two dinner invitations to my name, and they're great goodnights. I'll stay tonight and go home tomorrow, since you are no longer suspected."

I hadn't thought of her clothes. Poor old beautiful Jo! But she always looked lovely in anything she put on. I rang for Cello to unpack.

Cello knows a beautiful woman when she sees one; and she never disguised the fact that she thinks so. She hooked Jo into a very simple black gown that I had never seen before—and paused to wonder where she got it—then sat back on her heels on the floor and squeaked Frenchly over the effect, as if she were entirely responsible for it.

"Ah, mademoiselle is most charming, most beautiful—out ou, oh, out ou!" Jo knew enough French to understand that. "Mademoiselle has the grand air; mademoiselle is exquisite!"

Mademoiselle undoubtedly was. But I stood by with the most beautiful gown Mrs. Hazard had provided for me hanging upon my shoulders unhooked and unnoticed.

"Well, Cello," I remarked, "you might quit scrabbling around on your knees and give me a little attention. Mademoiselle isn't going to run away; she is here for a week."

"Ah, mademoiselle, pardon!" Cello cried. "My sweet, charming mademoiselle, I am all contrition. But mademoiselle la soeur is most beautiful. I am entrances!"

Jo paused in contemplation of her tall, slim figure in the mirror when Cello disappeared for a moment.

"How do you like my gown?" she asked.

"It's lovely. Where did you get it?"

"Made it." I looked at her tolerantly, the way she has of looking at me.

"I may be a ninny, but I'm not that gullible," I retorted. "It looks like a model."

"It is a model," Jo said calmly. "And marked 'Paris,' but it never saw Paris."

"What are you driving at?" I demanded.

"The establishment is Madame Gantier, Robes et Manteaux."

"Poor old Winthrop!"

told her. "Natalie lost a very valuable ruby and accused me of taking it. The circumstances were against me, but after we had telephoned for you she told me she knew I hadn't. I am no longer suspected."

"And that is all?" asked Jo, with that same unerring penetration.

I shook my head and tried to swallow a silly lump in my throat.

"He loves me," I said.

"He is Mr. Hazard—of course? Oh, Loulie! Loulie!"

She caught me in her arms and drew me close, and I cried on her motherly bosom while she kissed my hair.

"Jo, it had to happen," I sobbed. "He's so perfectly dear."

"They always are," Jo replied with a sigh. "And you love him! And of course you've got to break your heart and give him up!"

"What else could I do, Jo?" I asked. "Why, I haven't a penny; I'm practically a servant. I couldn't do anything else, could I?"

"You could," replied Jo, "but you won't. My poor little girl."

After I had dulled my cry and dictated my nose I told her all the queer things that had happened in connection with those lost jewels. She had seen Winthrop's post of it in the news papers. I even told her of that midnight chase where Hap suddenly had found himself in my bedroom, and what Natalie had told me of being sure she had seen the Due d'Aubigny in town. It wasn't violating confidences, for Jo is Jo.

"But how could the Due d'Aubigny have taken the ruby?"

"Slub-khi!" she whispered. "I haven't dared think that far. He couldn't possibly have been connected in any way—"

She did not finish. "You won't mention this to a soul, will you, Miss Cutler? It's rather absurd."

"But if Winthrop should need—?"

"You said his arrest was not serious," she interrupted.

"No, I isn't. Do you think Mr. Abbott is?"

"Shopping?" repeated the reporter. "Duh?" He looked at Hap and smiled, glanced toward the front door, then frankly looked over Hap's shoulder at the crowd on the terrace. Hap noted the action and grinned. He swept his hand generally in our direction.

to say to Mrs. Hazard that she had a slight headache and didn't wish to be disturbed.

The Evening Columbian fell like a bomb into our midst at Lone Oak just before dinner. I remember one awful line in that glaring heading:

"Miss Aganzia Positively Identifies Emerald Bracelet."

"How do you like my gown?" she asked.

"It's lovely. Where did you get it?"

"Made it." I looked at her tolerantly, the way she has of looking at me.

The Arrival of Jo.

There's something so self-sufficient about Jo. She drove up under the porte cochere late Wednesday afternoon, jumping on the emergency, pushed up her goggles and alighted, totally oblivious of the surprised and admiring glances directed at her from those who happened to be having tea, and things, on the terrace. Jo drove like a man; she's so sure of herself, and I suppose a lone woman in a hulking brute of a car was just a little out of the ordinary. Benny Bliss arose, taking his high-ball with him, and perched frankly on the stone coping until Lydia pulled his coat and gave a sidelong glance in my direction.

"Where's the garage?" Jo asked as I came to meet her.

"Vincent will take the car around for you," I told her.

I sounded the buzz for Vincent and took her upstairs. It was good to see her again. I felt that she was going to be a strong, firm prop in a sagging house-party still suffering from the shock of that awful damaging evidence against Winthrop. When we reached my sitting room she went into her arms, clasped me and went straight to the point.

"Now, what's the matter?" she asked.

"You're sick and droopy."

"It's a silly thing I'm going to tell you," she drawled. "I have no foundation for my supposition, but Saturday, when I was in town, I'm sure I saw the Due d'Aubigny."

I gasped, and my mouth fell open.

"Of course, I didn't even know him, but the Due d'Aubigny is not easily forgotten. He has peculiar scars."

"Yes, I know," I interrupted. "A sailor cut."

"Matter?" I echoed. "What's the matter?"

"Same as I told you, Mr. Abbott?"

"Why, the Due d'Aubigny?" I answered irritably. "Whatever made you think it was the Due d'Aubigny?"

"Oh, I think of silly things like that sometimes," she replied. "She stood so still for so very long, while her eyelashes sweet her cheeks, that I began to digen. "Did Miss Aganzia absolutely identify the emerald bracelet as her own?" she asked finally.

"Absolutely. It put Winthrop in an awful hole, and so, Winthrop never took that bracelet. He's not a thief; he's a dear, and there's a horrible mistake somewhere."

When we came into the drawing-room Hap was lounging near the door waiting for me, quizzically regarding the hallowed circle of which Miss Grace was the center. John was all the way across the room, sitting near one of the open windows, but when he saw us he stared, got up, nearly upsetting a table, and, upon my soul, I believe he would rudely have interrupted the duke's involved speech over Jo's hand if I hadn't intervened.

"My sister, Miss Codman, Mr. Crowninshield," I said in a hurry, for fear he would actually kiss her before I got them introduced—John, who never looked twice at a woman to his life.

"I have a new hat, a perfect beauty! It came on the last express!" And everybody wanted to know the color, and what it looked like.

CHAPTER XX.

The Picture Gallery.

I thought I knew Jo. I don't. She had other changes since we separated, or there were latent qualities in her that I never suspected. She had never been curious, especially about things that were none of her business, but she linked her arm through mine as we went toward the drawing-room after dinner.

Jo's answer I didn't catch. I wondered what on earth John was talking about, what he meant by his question. She linked her arm through mine as we went toward the drawing-room after dinner.

"What is the duke in love with?" she wanted to know.

"Natalie," I replied.

"Not want to marry," she qualified, "but cares for—loves?"

"If you mean anything horrid, obnoxious—why, I don't know anything about it, and I don't think you have any business thinking such things."

She merely smiled at my outburst.

"Is there a picture gallery here?" she asked presently.

"Yes. Why?"

"Oh, no reason particularly. There always is in these houses, isn't there?"

"No. There always is. Everybody I know, except the Hazards, have their pictures in town."

"Loulie, what was the name of the German count who took us to the Spring Exhibition?"

"Count Felix von Brunner," I answered promptly.

"Of course," she exclaimed. "I've racked my brain for an hour trying to think of it."

I turned about and faced her.

"Now look here, Jo, you are making me crazy with curiosity. You've asked me three questions for no reason on earth that I can see, and I want to know why."

"And you haven't asked me the one question I expected you to ask," Jo smiled quizzically.

"Sudden I thought of it."

"Where did you know John?" I demanded.

"He has a client who wants to buy our stock in the mine," she answered; "a client who thinks he can pump it dry."

"Can it be done, Jo?"

"I don't know." She laughed outright at my excitement. "He can get up to buy up all the stock. He can get it cheap, except ours. He offers us five thousand dollars for it. It's worth nothing unless the mine is pumped. Odd, wasn't it, Mr. Crowninshield or guessed who I was? And of
